By Mr. Tom Di Roma

Robbin' In The Hood: none By Mr. Tom Di Roma

After discovering he was able to teleport, young David Sanchez was further shocked to learn that his mother wasn't his real mother. Abandoned at birth, David had been found and then adopted by the woman whom he called his mother. Even more startling was the discovery of a second person, a classmate of his, who also had extraordinary abilities. Since both David and Rickie Connors were adopted when they were mere infants, the questions become: Who were their real parents? Are they even human? Are there others like them? And finally, why are the people closest to David being made to forget what he is? And is he next?

Editorial Review

About the Author

Spaceman is my nickname, writing is my game. At least, it has been since 1966 when I wrote my first young adult novel about a doomed love affair. Since then, most of my stuff has been short stories and juvenile fiction, with recent dabbings in juvenile books. Presently, I live and work in Southern CA where I'm a writer first and a graphic technician for an advertising agency second.
