Editorial Review

From Library Journal

In interviews with Erdrich, Harjo, Ortiz, Welch, and others, Abenaki writer/scholar Bruchac moves toward an articulation of what makes material uniquely Native; it may be dual citizenship in tribe and country, rootedness in place, particular sense of community, and belief in the inherent harmony of existence. Some of the writers struggle with conflicting desires to explain what is Indian and to observe the sacred by retaining anonymity. Showing deep respect and knowledge of one another's works, these writers repeatedly affirm the value of life. Highly recommended. Rhoda Carroll (formerly Yerburgh), Vermont Coll., Montpelier
